WATER ROUTE ASSURED FOR THE WEST

BY FEDERAL OFFICIALS AT MISSISSIPPI MEETING

Nine Foot Channel To Be Finished Quickly Shippers Are Informed By River Engineers—Freight Rate On Grain For Gulf Loading To Be Three Cents Less Than Cost of Rail Transportation.

Advocates of improved waterways, gathered at St. Louis, Missouri Monday night, from 26 states at the Mississippi Valley Association convention regarded their program as sure of accomplishment, because backed by the word of President Coolidge, Secretary Herbert C. Hoover, the chief of the army engineers and the chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors committee.

"This is the most gratifying thing in my long experience," James E. Smith, president, and veteran leader of the waterway movement, said, on reading the letter of President Coolidge, in which support was promised for "development of the waterways of the Mississippi—as rapidly as our financial resources will permit."

Secretary Hoover's address, definitely outlining a broad national policy of inland waterway development Smith declared, was a pronouncement of "historic significance."

"It should interest every citizen," Smith said, "inasmuch as its consummation will enrich every one."

Secretary Hoover, General Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Army Engineers, and S. Wallace Dempsey, Buffalo, New York, chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors committee, each made pleas that the entire country regard waterway development as a national improvement, and that sections of the country work with instead of against each other.

After detailing his program for a 12,000 mile system of waterways, a 9,000 mile Mississippi system, of a uniform channel depth of nine feet, to cost between $12,000,000 and $14,000,000, Secretary Hoover pointed to the fact every waterway project in the country falling into the muck of litigation and interstate quarrel, which could be solved amicably by determination of broad programs for each stream solely in national interest.

"Litigation and political action," he added, "produce feelings, but they do not produce water."

General Jadwin and Chairman Dempsey both said, "get your barges ready," to those who intend new lines on the Missouri and Upper Mississippi. They also indicated that the time "must come" and is already near when there will be connection between the Great Lakes and the seaboard and when the lakes and the gulf will have connection and a nine-foot channel from Chicago down the Illinois and on down the Mississippi.

Wheat will be coming down the Missouri river at a saving of three cents a bushel in freight rates in two years' time, they both predicted. To those who would take advantage of the prospect General Jadwin said, "Take the gamble—I'll do my part." His plan for improvement of the Upper Mississippi, he said, would be ready "in a few weeks."

Chairman Dempsey designated the St. Lawrence river as "a foreign waterway," and advocated an "All-American route" from the lakes to the Hudson river, at either Albany or New York.

"The Great Lakes and the Hudson," he said, "must be connected." Congressman Cleveland A. Newton, Missouri, assailed the "power interests" of New York and the St. Lawrence for opposing limited diversion of Lake Michigan water to the Illinois river. They raised no hue and cry, he said, until they learned "the tremendous value to them of the water which for 20 years had been going from the Great Lakes down the Mississippi to the Gulf."

Reelection of James E. Smith to head the association another year was believed to be assured with naming of a nomination committee of thirty, headed by T. J. Brodnax, Kansas City. The resolutions committee of thirty was headed by Thomas F. Cunningham, New Orleans.

A good deal of extra comfort can be got out of an old armchair if the back legs are cut down slightly. This makes the chair into a very pleasing easy chair. About three inches removed from the back legs is usually sufficient.

California's Grape Crop Increases Yearly

When the Volstead law went into effect, growers of wine grapes bewailed the loss of one of southern California's most valuable crops. They were fooling themselves. The demand, instead of decreasing, has increased until this year the record crop is being harvested with millions of dollars worth of grapes on the vines. The photograph which was made at Cucamonga, near Los Angeles, shows one of the huge vineyards being stripped of its crop.

BURGLAR PROOF

The Rothman store is now completely burglar proof at every entrance and the plate glass with the A. D. T. electric circuit.

It is one of the famous Signal Protective co.'s electric burglar alarm systems which makes an entrance practically impossible without setting off the large signal gong which can be heard for blocks.

This system is one of the most complete burglar proof attachments which can be had and is yet to be beaten by any law breaker and is the same as used by banks and jewelers. We feel this will put a stop to the burglarizing at Rothman's.

DYPHTHERIA EPIDEMIC IS NOT PROBABLE

Supervisor of Health Met With Mayor Fitzpatrick and Organizations.

Dr. T. W. Mahoney, district supervisor of the state board of health, of Columbus, came to Circleville Tuesday morning upon request of Mayor Fitzpatrick and held a meeting at the council chamber, at which meeting was present the mayor, health officer city board of health and the city board of education.

Dr. Mahoney is an authority on contagious diseases and has had considerable experience in epidemics of diphtheria in various communities throughout the state. He canvassed the diphtheria situation in Circleville and ascertained the true condition as it now exists and found that there are now seven mild cases here. Dr. Mahoney also gave a very instructive talk and discussion on the subject of diphtheria and of the condition and rules and regulations to be observed in any community where this disease exists.

He also said that there is nothing in the Circleville situation to cause any alarm whatever, but he thought it was well and proper to carefully observe all cases of sore throat and any children having same should go to their family physicians at once should remain out of school and away from other children until such time as the sore throat had fully disappeared or permission was given to return to school.

He also advised a strict quarantine of all diphtheria patients. He further said that there should be no disturbance of business or the regular conduct of the schools, as he thought the matter could be better handled by having the schools go along with their usual sessions. He said that the health officer with the assistance of the district nurse had the matter in hand and were conforming to the usual rules and regulations of the state board of health and were taking every precaution to prevent any spread of the disease and he also urged every one to cooperate with the health officer and the district nurse.

Wife Stopped Talking

A resident of Tusculoosa, Ala., was fishing in a creek when his wife came up behind him and began talking his head off about something he should be doing instead of fishing. The man couldn't get in a word edgewise so he continued fishing. All of a sudden the fisherman felt a tug on his line. He heaved suddenly and a four-foot eel sailed out of the water, went over his shoulder and wrapped itself around the woman's neck, severely choking her. She had no more to say when her husband pulled the eel off and reluctantly threw it back into the water.—Exchange.

FOOD CHEWING

As a people we chew our food too little so we might expect that the food faddist would go to the opposite extreme of chewing it excessively. The original theory of Fletcher was that food should be chewed once for each tooth that the chewer has, though it would seem more reasonable to chew it the more when there are fewer teeth.

Later the theory was advanced that one should chew each morsel 100 or even 120 times, and indeed some extremists insisted that food should never be deliberately swallowed, but should be allowed "to fold its tents like the Arabs and silently steal away." One should chew until there is nothing left to chew. A sup of milk or soup should be traded from one side of the mouth to the other until it is lost in the process.

Rather strangely a certain class of people derived much benefit from this absurd and unnatural procedure. Well-to-do business men sitting at a desk all day without exercise, and eating three rich meals a day, tried Fletcherism and were greatly helped, because they could not overeat while Fletcherizing—the day wasn't long enough. As a result they ate much less and felt better.

Such folks were of course enthusiastic and recommended the fad to their friends in the most extravagant terms. Being very often prominent people, they were listened to and followed. It was claimed that if one would chew his food ten times as much he would need to eat only one-tenth as much. This is, of course, sheer nonsense. The working-man needs real food because he must have energy. Proper chewing is essential to good digestion but excessive mastication certainly cannot take the place of meat, and bread and beans.—Thurman B. Rice, M. D.

Youth Is Served in New Fashions

Even Models for Mature Women Reflect Season's Air of Youthfulness.

This is the season of youth in styles, everything in women's dress being displayed in the light of girlhood, even in the fashions designed for women who are admittedly grown up. This was one of the outstanding features illustrated at the exposition of arts and industries in the recent dramatic pageant of fashion, says a fashion writer in the New York Times. Many picturesque examples dramatically presented the sweep through the century to the present season, all toward the grace, lightness, simplicity and beauty of youth.

The busiest shopper in New York and in every other big town is the mother of daughters who are to be fitted out for boarding school and college. The progress made in the art of dress has been so remarkable in the past four years that the younger women, even girls in their teens, have come in for a large share of attention and the fashions for them at all ages from the nursery to the graduating class are given the endeavors of the best designers. Just anything so it is simple, practical and not too grown-up, is not the answer to the question of a wardrobe for the juniors and misses of this day and age. The department for the younger set is considered one of first importance, and the very best from the designers on both sides of the water is gathered in for the approval of these young persons.

It is a jolly experience for every mother who has appreciation and taste, especially if she has the cooperation of the young person herself. But sophistication and independence in these matters come early nowadays, and most girls are fairly well able to select their own clothes. This is greatly simplified in the styles of this season, which exhibit more common sense, propriety and charm than have been shown in the fashions of several seasons past. The models of frocks, wraps, and even of hats for girls and young women do not vary widely from those designed for women. They reflect all the way through the youthful tendency of dress for women very much to the advantage of both. The latest autumn frocks and suits are conventional without being in the least commonplace, and many delightful and chic styles are shown.

Character of Materials. The first recommendation in the new things is the same character of the materials of which the fall suits and frocks for girls are made. The flimsy stuffs—the voiles, crepes and chiffons—were the fad for several seasons are quite out, and instead there are all the weaves of fine woollens, light in weight, supple in texture and more lovely in color this year than ever before.

The latest suit is a compromise with the regulation tailleur—a snappy little outfit that is a winter version of the jumper suit that had such a long run of popularity. The only difference is that the jumper in the fall suit is really a jacket to be worn over a silk or jersey blouse. This type of dress is adaptable for almost every age, from the little school girl to the college graduate. Almost invariably the skirt is plaited, either all the way around the clusters of side or box plaits, or the front is plaited and the back is left plain. Many of these little suits are of one material; others are made with the coat of plain goods, the skirt of plaid or check or the coat figured and the skirt of plain woolen plaid.

These suits are having such vogue that they are being done in an amazing variety of designs as to combination of material and of color. The style of introducing plaid, check or any patterned goods with the plain material is illustrated in suits and frocks for misses in much the same manner as that in women's dress. This idea is conspicuously illustrated in sports suits and clothes for general wear.

The smartest model yet shown is the sports suit in which kasha and leather are put together. A skirt of gray kasha kilted is designed to be worn with a jacket of soft green kid skin which is lined with the woolen material. The coat is cut on straight box lines with pockets and a narrow belt of glaze kid that is fastened with a nickel snap and harness hook.

Another charming little suit is of kasha in a pretty shade of green, with a short coat of green suede, cut in the style of a Norfolk jacket, with narrow belt of patent leather drawn through slits in the cloth underneath the box plaits. The leather coats are severely plain, with cuffs, outer pockets and small, close collar that may be left open to form revers at the neck showing the shirt or gimp.

A sport suit designed for a girl of sixteen is effective in green and tan—

Sport Suit Has Kilted Skirt; Coat Is of Green Leather.

the skirt of plain moss-green flannel, the short box coat of green kid in large plaid of tan.

Plaids Are Popular.

Plaids are especially good this season and are shown in endless smart combinations in suits, coats and frocks. A coat dress of brown and tan plaid worsted is cut very low in the neck, back and front, and with deep armholes, to be worn over an underdress of plain tan crepe. In another pretty model a warm shade of burgundy kasha alternates with a broken plaid of fine lines in black. An ensemble is shown in black and white, a coat frock of wool check with narrow belt of red patent leather, coat of the checked material with lining, collar and deep cuffs of plain black.

The browns are especially attractive this season and combine beautifully with tan, beige and the new yellow. making the harmony in the tints of the wall flower from which they take their name. All of the reds are fashionable—the wine shades, garnet, mulberry and such bright reds as coral, flame, geranium and lacquer. Britany blue, old blue and French blue are shown in some of the new frocks, with beige, tan and many charming shades of green.

The jumper plan is suggested in some of the latest frocks for day wear, a band or ripples about the hips giving the effect of a two-piece costume.

Scarfs appear to have caught the spirit of the fall season, despite the fact that they are being shown in chiffon—usually treated as a summer fabric or for very formal evening use. Rustle leaves, autumn foliage and huge chrysanthemums are combined or used singly in these large, flowing scarfs. One especially attractive shawl-scarf on a pastel background of beige surrounds its plain center with a border of bunches of chrysanthemums, ranging in color from pale yellow to deep rustle tones. Another scarf of all-over design is without flowers and depends upon leaves and branches for its design. The plume furnishes the inspiration for other scarfs that take in the blue and gray tones. Occasionally in these colors it is introduced in a ribbon streamer fluttering throughout the design, or in a multicolored border.

Squares of large size, just the thing for school, sports wear, to fill in with a top coat, or to complete a sweater outfit, show Chinese inspiration in color selection and design. The material chosen, in fact, is pongee from China. In place of the conventional squares with borders, or all-over designs after the French prints, these squares are blocked off sections. Each section has some marking or odd turn of design. One scarf of red, gray and black, for instance, shows black lettering on the gray section; on its red part a ball of bright orange stands out; and the black appears to unite the other colors in harmony. Chinese lettering is used, mostly to fill out corners and complete the color scheme. When several of these scarfs are seen at a distance, the effect is remarkably like a line of signal flags.

DISAPPEARS ON WEDDING EVE, VICTIM OF AMNESIA

Episode Precipitates Dramatic Scene Marked by Staunch Loyalty and Bitter Criticism.

East Orange, N. J.—When Fred S. Briggaman of this city disappeared the night before his wedding, a victim of amnesia, he precipitated a dramatic scene marked by staunch loyalty and bitter criticism. Some believed he feigned amnesia in order to avoid marriage, others believed he actually suffered a blow on the head which robbed him of his bride.

It was the latter story that Briggaman told his landlady when he left his boarding place the night before he was to lead Miss Helen Scott to the altar. He complained of a pain in the head and told of having been hit by an automobile some days before, saying he was discharged from a hospital almost immediately.

After that no word was heard of Briggaman. At least not until a relative of the disappointed bride-to-be visited Albany, N. Y. There on the street she passed a man in overalls who looked like Briggaman. He had the same gold teeth, the same cleft chin. The relative accosted him.

The man laughed. No, he said, he wasn't an insurance man named Briggaman, but a bridgeworker named Dyson. He had been in Albany a long time.

It might have ended there, but Miss Scott was called to Albany. She identified Briggaman.

Prince Gives Notice

of His Pet Dislikes

Brussels.—When Prince Charles, second son of King Albert, is given a "functionary" assignment he does not like the royal demeanor sometimes reflects it.

The prince was pressed into service as "royal representative" at a soccer game during a visit of his brother, Leopold, to Stockholm, where he was courting his fiancée, Princess Astrid. He rather disliked it. Met at the stadium gate by the burgomaster, Prince Charles listened in a bored manner to the welcome and finally said somewhat testily:

"My brother, Leopold, is courting and in order to go and see his girl he turns over all these jobs to me."

It was a hot autumn day, but the prince's words somewhat chilled the elderly burgomaster, who said apologetically:

"Your royal highness, we appreciate your presence here very highly. Is there anything that we can do for you?"

Running a parched tongue over his lips, the prince, catching sight of a waiter, replied:

"Yes, order a couple of beers. I am about dying of thirst."

Nature Fakes Replace Animal Bad Actors

Washington.—Animals and insects play some queer tricks before the movie camera. Laboratory workers of the Agriculture department have found many bad actors in the insect world and some in the animal kingdom that screen so well that they flatter themselves.

The common clothes moth, which feeds on father's best suit, performs so energetically under the calcium lights that he has to be chloroformed and photographed as he regains consciousness and is in a semilutering state.

The chief piece of nature faking is carried out with the gutter rat. This rodent is so wild under the Klieg rays that tame white rats have to be painted black in order to get good results. The common rat, however, is used for closeups because of the deception lurking in the pet rat's pink eyes.

Use Baby Combs to

Save Soap's Ravages

London.—"Baby" combs are in great demand in Bond street. Society women have found that frequent washing of shingled hair turns to gray, and hair combed with the fine-toothed combs bearing the stamp "Baby" can be kept so clean that it requires little washing.

A final rub with silk gives the hair a finer gloss than a brushing, and large handkerchiefs for this purpose are offered by toilet specialists. These fine baby combs are kept clean by slipping them through hanks of horse-hair.

Niece Lost 18 Years

Found Through Arrest

New York.—Miss Julia Schwab found her niece, Miss Julia Marie Schwab, after a search of 16 years through publicity given the charge that the girl had stolen $20 worth of furs and clothing from Miss Susan Walsh, with whom she had lived for 18 years.

Miss Schwab found the girl in Bridge Plaza court, where she was arraigned before Magistrate Golden. The aunt asked the court to put the girl in her custody, but the magistrate refused and held Miss Schwab in $1,000 bail to await the action of the grand jury. She could not provide that amount and was sent to the Raymond street jail.

WAR BULLETINS

Gen. Hugh Drum said at a Washington luncheon:

"A good deal of the war news from Syria and Morocco reminds me of little Jimmy's papa."

"Little Jimmy looked up from the newspaper and asked his papa what a drawn battle was."

"A drawn battle, Jimmy," said the father, "is one that the enemy wins." —Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Fooling With a Flivver

A man owning a flivver decided to equip it with the latest riggings. He bought every fuel and power-saving device on the market. He saved 15 per cent on a certain carburetor, 10 per cent in fuel on this, that and the other thing. When he got them all on, a friend asked: "How does the car run?"

He replied: "Not very good. I have to stop every 15 miles and bail out the gasoline." —Good Hardware.

Wind and Shorn Lamb

Contrary to the popular belief, the quotation, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," is not a Bible verse. It is an old proverb of unknown authorship. The earliest known use of it appears in Laurence Stern's "Sentimental Journey." But there it is quoted, showing that Stern did not claim it as his own.

OPENING NIGHT
THANKSGIVING
ATHLETIC CLUB

"Monte" Beavers Will be Here With His Crack Team
of Newark Players.

Thanksgiving night marks the opening of the basket ball season for the C. A. C. and following the custom of ten years standing their opponents will be a "Monte" Beaver coached team.

Most everyone in this "neck of the woods" is all acquainted with "Monte" another home town boy that has made good in other fields. While Monte has succeeded but once in that ten years to produce a team that could beat the home boys he has always brought out one that would make them step some to come out on the long end of the score and he is going to go us one better this year and try to win. (Just let him try.)

Regarding the C. A. C. crowd, the line-up is practically the same as last year, except that the center position is entirely new to C. A. C. followers.

Art Steele needs no introduction;
all fans know his ability and with Gatrel as a running mate makes a pair hard to stop. With dependable Bobby Palm to back them up gives the club a trio of forwards that any team should be proud of. At the guards we have Robinson and Dwight Steele,
"Nuff Sed." Then there is Merriman the utility man better than the most where ever you put him. At center the club has two new faces, Parks of
C. H. S. fame and Rhoades of the Jackson township school team for the past four years. Parks is an aggressive hard working player that will make any of them step to keep pace with him, backed by Rhoades makes this position well taken care of.

This line-up gives to the club one of the best combinations it has had for some time and will be hard to beat.

The game which is scheduled to start at 8:15 p. m. will surely be a ringer and one all fans will look back to with fond recollections, so let's get set for the big show, get in early for the good seats and start the season with a bang.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE VANISHING

Stream Immortalized by Riley Giving Out.

Greenfield, Ind.—The laughter of children at play drowns out "the gurgle of the water 'round the drift just below" the "old swimmin' hole" and few of the surroundings as James Whitcomb Riley knew them during his boyhood days here remain.

A Riley memorial park with a playground borders Brandywine creek at the "old swimmin' hole" which the Hoosier poet immortalized in rhyme.

A railroad bridge, an electric line trestle and the National trail, an important east-and-west motor highway, cross the creek near the "swimmin' hole." The pastoral quietude of the spot, broken only by the hoarse solo of a bullfrog or the plaintive call of a dove, as Riley knew it six decades ago, has been lost in the march of the years. Few of the heavy-foliated trees that lined the banks

In the long, lazy days
Where the humdrum of school made
so many runaways,
How pleasant was the journey down
the old dusty lane
Where the tracks of our bare feet was all print so plain remain. The Brandywine itself, once a sizable stream, now is sluggish and shallow and contains scarcely enough water for swimming.

Greenfield basks contentedly in the glory that came to her favorite son.
The distinction of having been his birthplace and the center of many of the scenes he sketched in rhyme is one of the city's most stable commercial assets.

The severe two-story frame house on Main street where Riley was born and her sister. For ten cents visitors are permitted to roam the rooms and finger the possessions of Riley which still are retained there.

Before he discovered a bent for verse-making Riley was a sign painter, and several examples of his craftsmanship are preserved here.

Permanent Waves Ancient

Artificially curled hair, including a form of the permanent wave, was a hair-dressing art of centuries ago, and strangely enough it was a fancy indulged in by men as well as women. Records of the vanity have been found in Assyria and Egypt, and there have been found implements for curling the hair among the relics of the Goths and Normans. Chaucer mentions hair "crulling" in the Canterbury tales. The methods were extremely crude, however.

Steam Still Important

Steam has far from passed from the public utility field, especially in the eastern states, though in the last quarter of a century waterpower has been developed on a large scale. In the Carolinas steam has been found more economical than waterpower, and the New England states, it is said, do not look with as covetous eyes on Canadian waterpower because long distance transmission is not always considered as cheap as steam production of electricity.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union-Herald:—Louis Spencer Carpenter, son of James and May Hohenstein Carpenter, was born in Circleville, Ohio, September 12, 1919.

Shortly after the close of day November 17, God's angels came and carried Louis home relieving him of his sufferings at the age of seven years, two months and five days.

Louis was a promising child, of loving disposition endearing himself to all who knew him.

He loved the Sunday school and church having been baptized in infancy and was a regular attendant at the services of the church. He will be sadly missed in the home by father, mother, brother, grandparents and dear relatives, in the Sunday school and church and by his schoolmates and many little friends.

Card of Thanks

We desire to extend sincere thanks to Rev. G. J. Troutman for his comforting words; Mader & Ebert for their services and kindness and all who were so kind in the hour of our bereavement.

Mr. and Mrs. James Carpenter And Son, Dudley, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hohenstein.

Public Squares First of World's Markets

Erection of buildings to serve the purpose originally met by public squares did not become common until the Eighteenth century, yet as early as 1300 the grain market of Florence, Italy, was housed beneath massive architecture, while in Constantinople and famous eastern cities, certain streets had long been covered over to shut out the blazing sun. These streets, relegated to the various trades, made up the great bazzars of the Orient. Among their narrow intersections one is bewildered by exotic sights and odors, one moment dazzled by silks, swords, beads and finery, and the next overpowered by cheeses, dried meats and overripe fruits. In comparison to the jumbled chaos of the bazaar, the markets of the Western world seem orderly and clean. Marketing in its old-time sense is no longer a world-wide practice, for the function of the market has enlarged and extended beyond the street and public square.—The Independent.

Man's Perversity.

The opportunities we least often let go by are opportunities to make fools of ourselves.—Boston Transcript.

AMUSEMENTS

If there's a moral to be gleaned from Gloria Swanson's latest picture, at the Metropolitan theater it is—"Fine Manners Don't Make Fine Ladies."

But—be that as it may, "Fine Manners" stands head and shoulders above anything Gloria has done in the past year. This is only natural when one considers that the story was written especially for the star by two veteran writers, James Ashmore Creelman and Frank Vreeland.

Glamorous Gloria

Gloria is more glamorous than ever before. As Orchid Murphy, the poor little hard working burlesque chorus girl, she has a role that is new and distinctive. You can't compare it to anything Gloria has played in the past. And because of this, it is the opinion of all those who've seen the picture that "Fine Manners" will prove to be the star's most popular vehicle.

We follow the story of a little girl from the East Side who meets a boy from the West Side and immediately falls in love with him. He likes her for her natural carefree manner. She loves him because he's—himself.

The young aristocrat, bored with society as he knows it, thinks that this chorine would be perfect—if only her crude manners were improved. Securing a sympathetic aunt's aid, he provides Orchid with everything that is needed in order to become a "lady."

At the end of six months, he returns from Europe to find an entirely different person than the girl he left behind. She has dropped all the old mannerisms he now realizes that he loved, and become just one of the great army of idle rich.

"The Fine Lady."

He tries to scratch the surface and find the real girl—but she, wondering at his disappointment in the change she has tried so hard to effect, does not guess his real thoughts. Of course, in the end, everything comes out all right and her jealous brother enters into and adds much to the plot's intricacies.

Eugene O'Brien stages a real comeback as Gloria's handsome lover, Walter Goss and Helen Dunbar are the only other important players. Both appear to advantage.

It should be mentioned prominently that the success of "Fine Manners" is due in large measure to Director Richard Rosson. This, his first picture for Paramount, definitely entitles him to quick recognition.

MILLIONS

Spent Daily In United States To See Movies.

The American people spend one-billion dollars every year for moving picture entertainment, according to Campbell MacCulloch in an article in this week's Liberty. "The rest of the world," he continues, "contributes some four hundred million dollars more annually to the support of this same national industry. Roughly one and one-half billion dollars of movie money."

"Admittedly, a business with a gross annual turnover of that size is a big business, taking rank with agriculture, the railroads, oil, and the automobile; and yet in the United States not more than 20,000 persons find regular employment in the making of pictures."

"The Department of Commerce," he continues, "is authority for the statement that there are 18,000 moving picture theaters in the forty-eight states of the Union, and that each day approximately 17,000,000 people patronize them. At an average of twenty cents each, these moviegoers pay about $3,400,000 daily to watch some 10,000 or 12,000 feet of celluloid unroll before their eyes."

Few Longevity Records

There have been many reputed instances of persons living to a great age, but authorities are of the opinion that such reports are not entirely reliable. In regard to persons living in three centuries, we would say that it is recorded that a peasant named Petraz Czarton died in 1724 in the village of Kipros, Hungary, at the age of one hundred eighty-five. This man, therefore, must have lived partly in three centuries. In America, Noah Baby died in 1901 at Piscataway, New Jersey, at the reputed age of one hundred thirty-two.

Shakespeare—New Version

When a money lender was pressing his claim against a debtor at White-chapel (Eng.) County court, the debtor remarked, indignantly: "He is a Shakespeare. He does want his meat of pound."

Speech and Action

Action hangs, as it were, "dissolved" in speech, in thoughts, whereof speech is the shadow; and precipitates itself therefrom. The kind of speech in a man betokens the kind of action you will get from him.—Carlyle.

DEMONSTRATION FLOCK OWNERS MAKE REPORT

Miss McKenzie Highest and Charles Schleich Second—Ten For Next Year.

Poultry Demonstration Flock Record owners have completed another year in record keeping. Miss Mary McKenzie of Pickaway township stands highest in list with 191 eggs per hen. Total average thruout the year.

Charles W. Schleich of Deercreek township is next with 172.15. Third for Mrs. H. C. Hines of Walnut township with a total average of 168.09. Fourth place to Edwin Judy of Salt-creek township with an average of 166.54 eggs per hen.

Monthly records turned in by the Demonstration flock owners give some valuable data on feeding and management. Ten farmers have signed up to keep records for the coming year. The farmers are; Mrs. Corn Rader Hood and Miss Mary McKenzie of Pickaway township; Mrs. E. H. Fetherolf and Miss Mary Porter, of Saltcreek township; Mrs. John Doering and Sterley Croman of Washington township; Mrs. Charles Schleich and Mrs. J. D. Carter of Deercreek township; Miss Mary Shortridge and Mrs. James Swearingen of Jackson township.

Removing Heat Stains

Heat stains may be removed from highly polished table by applying the following in their respective order, using a separate cloth for each: Kerosene, alcohol and sweet of linseed oil. The last should be well rubbed in until the spot no longer shows. Frequently a cloth moistened with warm camphorated oil will remove the stain.

Fast washing made safe

embodies a patented feature that makes fast washing safe.

The vertical crevice which is found at the base of the agitator in most washers of this type is apt to tear and wear clothing and crush buttons by grinding them between the two metal surfaces forming the crevice. This is not possible in the Haag Vortex. A patented design (it cannot be had in any other machine) eliminates entirely this destructive crack. For that reason the Haag Vortex can wash fast—60 pounds per hour—with perfect safety to clothing.

Every woman appreciates the new metal swinging wringer on the Vortex. You'll like it too. It has extra large semi-soft parastic rolls. The bearings are made of wood which has been soaked in tallow. They require no oil—eliminating all chance of grease streaked clothing.

Call us on the phone and ask for a free demonstration in your own home. You will not be obligated.

DEVIL IS NOT IN HELL, BIBLE STUDENTS TOLD

Neither Is Hell a Place of Fire and Brimstone, Speaker Tells Audience.

"The devil is not in hell, and never has been there," A. P. Johnson yesterday told International Bible Students at K. of P. Hall.

"Hell is not a place of fire and brimstone as was once supposed. The Hebrew word translated hell in our English Bibles, also is frequently translated 'grave' and 'pit,'" he said.

"Jacob understood hell to be a place of unconsciousness and death, just as described by Ecclesiastes.

"Not only has the devil never been in hell, but he will go into the lake of fire and brimstone. He will be completely destroyed.

"Hell is the condition of death from which there will be an awakening. The lake of fire, or Gehenna, represents destruction, or the second death. After the final judgment has been rendered and all the wilfully wicked have been destroyed, the universe will be in perfect harmony, and only that which is good will remain.

"Only those who love the right will have everlasting life in any sense of the word. Life in its fulness, upon a restored earth, which shall be made like the garden of Eden, will be the portion of all who will accept it upon the reasonable terms of obedience to the truth and to the right," he said.—O. S. Journal.

SHOES LIKE STILTS

Toward the end of the Seventeenth century it became the custom in Venice for women to wear "chopines," or exceedingly high-heeled shoes, almost like stilts. Social prestige was indicated by the height of the footwear.

FRENCH PORTERS ROB TOURISTS

Charges for Service Said to Be Excessive.

Paris.—One hundred francs for carrying two suitcases from the customs shed at Cherbourg to the tender, a trip of less than 100 yards, is charged by porters.

The imposition has caused the foreign steamship companies to take drastic steps against it. The union of baggage porters appears to have singled out Americans for its holdup tactics. In some instances passengers, especially unescorted women, have been literally robbed.

One American woman recently embarking on one of the ships flying the American flag gave the porter 40 francs. He demanded that she open her bag and produce more money. Terrorized, the woman unclasped her handbag and showed the porter one 20-franc note, all the French money she had left.

"This will have to do," said the holdup man, snapping the bill away. The woman shrieked, and one of the officials came along and made the porter disgorge but not without a short, spirited fight.

These instances, which had multiplied by hundreds recently, caused the skipper of an American ship to send for the walking delegate of the porters' union and warn him that if such sharp practice did not cease he would call upon his crew to handle the baggage and give them instructions to give a forced bath to any porter interfering.

Wood of Palmetto Tree

Now Used for Furniture

Atlanta, Ga.—The sabie palmetto tree, emblematic of the state of South Carolina, is about to attain its second place in the history of the United States. This time it will be chronicled in the annals of furniture manufacturing.

The tree received first historical mention as a protection for the American colonists in their defense of Fort Moultrie, where the shot from the British fleet sank harmlessly in the soft, spongy logs.

His attention prompted by the unique porous quality of the tree, a large industrialist acquired a 300,000-acre tract of groves and enlisted the aid of 12 laboratories of furniture companies in an attempt to apply a veneer finish.

The work was assigned to the woodwork department of the Georgia School of Technology, which, after a two-year period of research, has just succeeded in applying a glasslike veneered surface.

Its only use in the past has been for dock piling and the building of rugged, picturesque log cabins.

Eggless Custard Sale

Cost Him $10 Fine

Brockton, Mass.—Judge Carroll C. King had a busy day in district court here with cases that resulted from the Brockton fair. One case established itself as well out of the ordinary. It concerned one Lester Kohn, a concessionaire at the grounds. He was charged with "sale of custard containing no eggs." State Health Inspector Daniel G. McCarthy brought the charge, claiming that Kohn was doing a rushing business in selling custards, but he informed Judge King that a custard is not a custard without eggs. Kohn paid a $10 fine and it is the first time in the history of the local court that a conviction has been made on such a charge.

Presidents, Popes

Have Longest Lives

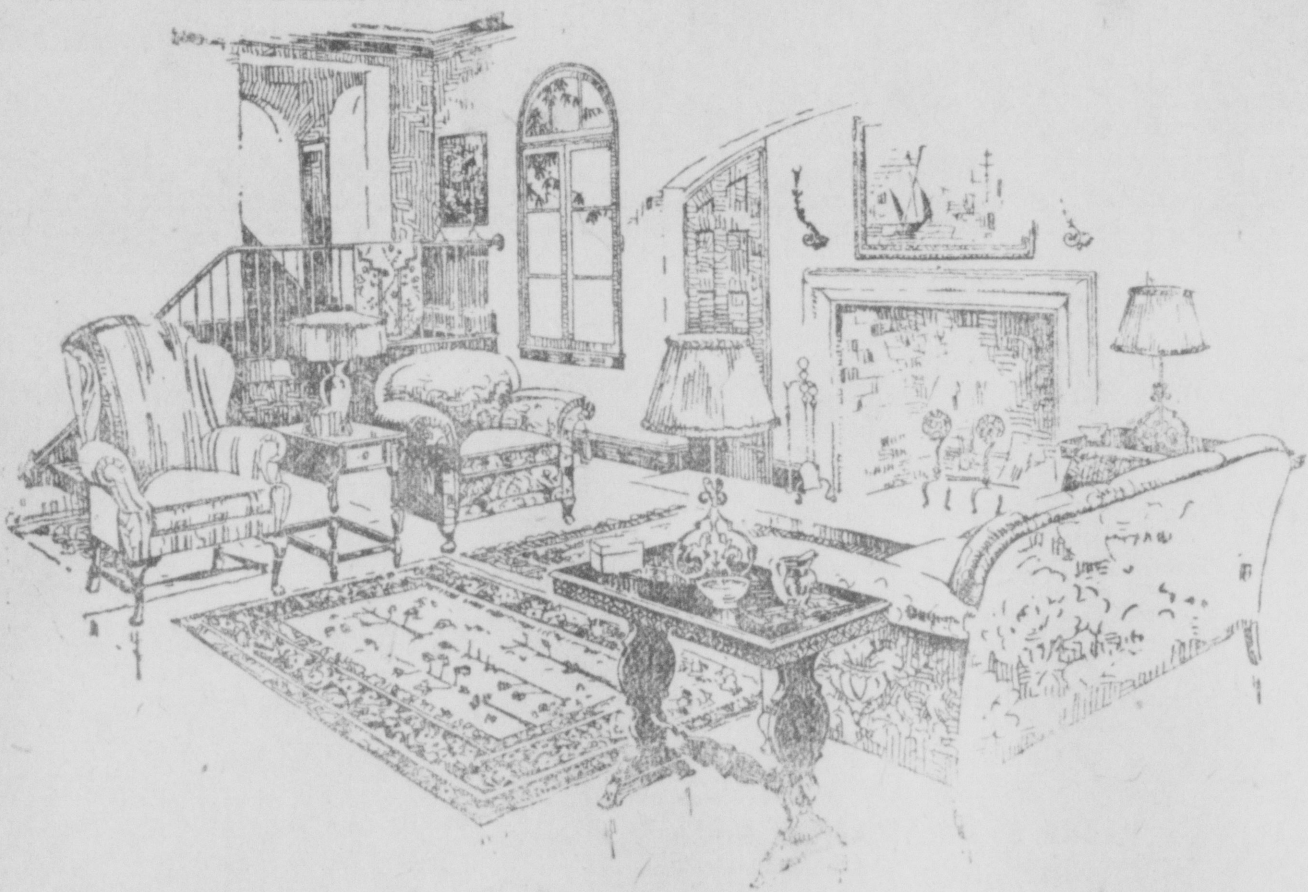

Washington.—What class of persons live the longest as an average?

Occupants of the White House hold the record for longevity, according to statistics on notable men compiled by Pirim Sorokin, a Russian economist. Their average life span is almost exactly the biblical three-score and ten.

Close on their heels as long-lived mortals are the popes of the Roman Catholic church, who average 69.6 years. A third group includes American millionaires, with 63.2 years. Scholars and scientists average 67.3 years and writing men 64.4 years.

The poorest showing was made by the hereditary monarchs of Europe. Though this group included some very long-lived families, the average longevity was only 53.6 years. In explanation of the poor showing of kings, it has been pointed out that other groups represent the results of selection.

The presidency and the papacy, for example, are both elective offices and are filled invariably by men of mature years and usually good health, who have made their own records, while monarchs are notabilities simply by accident of birth, and by the same accident of birth may come of stocks decidedly inferior so far as health and vigor are concerned.

Livable, Lovable Rooms

They owe much of their inviting charm to the deep comfort of

3-Piece Suites

From April till September one's passion for wicker and cretonne goes joyfully unchecked. But after that, say about the time the sun begins to slant pale gold and the wind takes on an edge—wicker and its playmates seem strangely cold and heartless (and spring-less)! While the mere mention of "overstuffed," "velour," "tapestry" calls up before eager eyes visions of untold warmth and friendliness. And warmth and friendliness are two things a winter living room needs to make it a success—to make it livable and lovable.

A 3-Piece Suite, the solid foundation upon which a living room can be built.

PLAY OPEN GOLF AT LOS ANGELES

Some of the Best Known
Golfers to Tee Off.

That a just share of the country's best known golfers will tee off in the Los Angeles $10,000 open golf tournament is evidenced by the large entry list already received. More than thirty "out-of-town" nible wielders have signed for the West's big event, to be held in Los Angeles, January 5, 7, 8 and 9.

Willie Hunter, former British open champion and member of the "Big Six" committee, in charge of the affair, declares that the West will have the greatest field in its history of golf. Mike Brady, Tom Kerrigan, Bobby Cruickshank, MacDonald Smith, Johnny Battini, Johnny Black, Larry Nabholz, Johnny Golden, C. R. Murray of Canada, Frank Minch, Elmer and Donald Harrison, Eddie Loos, Joe Novak, Tom Lally, Charlie Johnston and Fran Sprogel are a few from the East and Middle West who have already entered.

With the raising of the handicap limit, the field is expected to double.

Willie Hunter
International

Qualifying this year will be over four or more courses, instead of just two. By the ruling of the "Big Six" committee the first thirty of the 1926 Los Angeles open will not have to qualify on January 5. This will give a number of golfers a longer barnstorming season.

The first 18 holes will be played on January 7; the second 18 on January 8, and 36 holes on the following day. Low 64s and ties of the seventh and eighth go into the finals on Sunday, the 9th, to battle for the $10,000 prize money and silverware.

Young Harry Cooper, who has associated himself with a Los Angeles club, will defend his title. His was the first entry received for the big event. George von Elm, the West's greatest golfer and runner-up in the 1926 Los Angeles open, has also entered. It's a sure bet Von Elm will attract a good share of these golfers who are a bit undecided as to whether they will come westward or not.

The recently crowned amateur champion was accorded an ovation worthy of a national hero on his homecoming to Los Angeles. More than 5,000 people greeted him upon his arrival there.

Stars Sold for $50,000
by Mississippi League

Twenty-six players sold by the Mississippi Valley league this season will bring approximately $50,000 to the various clubs if the players all are retained.

A number of the deals were made on condition that the candidate be retained after May 1. A curious feature of the graduation this season was the fact that seven were taken from the tailenders, Cedar Rapids. The list of players advancing follows:

Cedar Rapids—Dennison, Schroeder, Mondino, Murchison, White, Burrus and Shields, Burlington—Mann, Bartholomew, Farr, Huffman and Nelson, Ottumwa—Bauer, Foley, Marlett, Johnson and Saltzgeber, Rock Island—Shanklin, Bryant and Cottelle, Waterloo—Rice, Abbott and Worthington, Dubuque—Bartells and Harvel, Moline—Adamson, Marshalltown—Schult.

Astrologers Say Stars
Favored Tunney to Win

English astrologers contend that it was written in the stars that Gene Tunney should beat Jack Dempsey for the heavyweight championship. Tunney's horoscope was distinctly favorable for the issue, whereas Dempsey's was not.

The sun, at the time of the fight, it is asserted, was transiting the place of Jupiter at Tunney's birth, and also was in sextile with the place of Uranus at his birth. Mercury was in much the same place, and about to reach the trine of the sun's position at his birth. Moreover, Mars was stationary, close to the trine of the moon's north node when he was born, all of which were auguries of victory.

In Dempsey's case the sun and Mercury at the time of the fight were in square with the sun's place at his birth which was an unfavorable influence.

Youngest Manager

Iowa this year provided the youngest team manager in professional baseball. George ("Dutch") While, a wide-range infielder and a .300 hitter, took over the management of the Cedar Rapids club in the Mississippi Valley league for the last two months of the season after two previous leaders had failed. He was just twenty-one when he took the team in hand. He was sold at the close of the season to the Danville club of the Three-I league.

AMERICAN GIRL WEDS RUSSIAN GRAND DUKE

Daughter of Late John J. Emery of Cincinnati, Assumes Title of Princess.

Biarritz, France, Nov. 21.—Grand Duke Dimitri Pavlovich, of a high Russian noble family and Miss Audrey Emery, daughter of the late John J. Emery, of Cincinnati, were married here today. Audrey Emery henceforth will be known as Princess Illinsky, a title conferred on her by Grand Duke Cyril, head of the imperial Russian family.

Metropolitte Evloksky, head of the orthodox church of Europe, officiated, having come especially from Paris accompanied by a large suite, customary at imperial marriages in Russia before the war. The church was handsomely decorated, and the metropolitte wore his full vestments, including a diamond tiara.

The bride's mother, Mrs. Alfred Anson, was present at the ceremony.

Knew Her Mother

The little daughter of an artist was playing on the porch of her home when a man selling colored postcards spoke to her. "Do you think your mother would like some of these?" he asked, showing her the cards. "No, I am sure she would not," was the decisive reply. "My father makes them."

THIS IS A TER- RIBLE COUNTRY

A speaker at a big church gathering in Memphis told his associates that there was more money lost in the United States last year, as the result of crime, than the whole international war debt amounts to. He proceeded to give some other statistics along the same line, as follows:

"There are more divorcees in this country every 11 days than there are in Great Britain in a year."

"There are six policemen killed in Chicago to every criminal who is killed."

"There are more criminals in the United States by 50,000 than there were soldiers in the combined armies at Waterloo."

Probably all true. And we might adduce just as striking statistics on the other side, to show what a decent, kindly, honest country this is—how many millions are given every year to charity, how many hundred thousand citizens serve in community campaigns, how many sober, law-abiding people there are doing their duty to God and man and taking care of their families, etc. But what's the use? One little question may suffice, not to condone the evil that America must plead guilty to, but to sum up and show the essential soundness of this land of contrasts:

Is there any other country in the world where the critics would rather live?

FRIDAY IN HISTORY

The superstition, according to The Mentor, varies in character and degree, but it is in most of us. There are some who would never start a long journey or transact any essential business on Friday. Others—even those that hoot the suggestion that they are superstitious—often find it just "convenient" to postpone until another time, anything they consider important.

Yet, American history is filled with important incidents that occurred on Friday. In fact, we of the Western Hemisphere, would never have come to be what we are, if it had not been for a lot of events that happened on Friday.

On Friday, October 12, 1492, Columbus discovered the Western Hemisphere. Land was reported by one of his sailors, Rodrigo de Triana, at 2 o'clock in the morning.

On Friday, March 6, 1496, Henry VII gave John Cabot his commission to pursue the discovery of America which resulted in the finding of North America.

On Friday, August 28, 1609, Henry Hudson discovered the Delaware river.

On Friday, September 11, 1609, the Half Moon entered New York Bay.

On Friday, August 21, 1620, the Pilgrims sailed from Southampton in the Speedwell.

On Friday, February 22, 1732, George Washington was born.

On Friday, June 16, 1775, Bunker Hill was seized and fortified.

On Friday, October 17, 1777, Burgoyne surrendered at Saratoga.

You Cannot Always Tell

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

THE sun-browned young man in riding trousers at the far end of the veranda looked speculatively after the smartly dressed young woman who had just flitted down the hotel steps. There was something about her which seemed to say "I am" and "I belong." Hartley had no doubt about that. He had long wanted to meet her, but, strangely enough, she seemed to know no one among the guests at the hotel and kept decidedly by herself.

Leisurely, he rose and sauntered slowly off in the direction that the young lady, listed simply as C. Blake in the register, had taken.

Now it happened that a dilapidated old flyver was parked at the summit of a short but very steep grade ascending from the main thoroughfare of the village. Standing at the curb and insufficiently blocked, it suddenly wheeled into motion and began a rapid descent, driverless, down to the crossing below.

With a fearful speed it came down, heading straight for a group of pedestrians just as Hartley glimpsed, in that group, the silk-sweatered form of the girl he was trailing. He saw the menacing flyver before she did and, without an instant's hesitation, catapulted against her in such a way as to push her ahead out of the way, plunging forward himself but escaping only by a narrow margin the terrific impact of the machine.

The incident needs no further dwelling upon. It had served its purpose. Having one's life saved is sufficient production for most of us and a few brief words—"Why, yes, we are at the same hotel, are we not?" and "I am sure I remember you!" established them further on cordial ground.

Not until Hartley reached his room did he realize that names had not passed between them, although, for that matter, she might as easily discover his name as he had discovered hers.

However, the following morning as they met on the veranda, Hartley listened to repair the omission. "I forgot to mention yesterday," he said rather hesitantly, "I am Hartley Van Buren."

The girl looked up at him quickly. "I—I am the Princess Olga of Russia," and she laughed.

But Hartley didn't like the laugh. It was quite evident that she didn't believe him.

In the days that followed, their acquaintance ripened into friendship which seemed in turn about to ripen into something even deeper and more lasting. There was always a slight pause when each addressed the other by name, but the subject had not been mentioned again between them. In fact, personalities had been rather avoided between them beyond those which dealt with the various tastes and interests they found that they shared.

Then, one afternoon, after a long delightful hour on the beach, "Princess Olga" had occasion to open her little beaded purse and, as she did so, out dropped a card.

Hartley bent to pick it up and, as he did so, could not avoid seeing the printed inscription.

Coralie Blake, manicurist.
Now Hartley did not see anything remotely disgraceful in being a manicurist. To him it seemed as honorable a way of earning a living as any other. What really troubled him was the girl's deceit.

Not that she had ever said right out and out that she was not a manicurist! No, indeed. But she had led him to believe that she had spent her life in a far different sort of way—travel, study, charities such as only the rich indulge in.

Hartley braced himself. "Princess," he said, "I couldn't help seeing what was on that card."

Coralie looked up at him, puzzled. Then, "Oh, yes," she said.

He waited for her to go on while he watched her miserably and realized that he adored every crinkly curl on her aristocratic little head.

"You—you think I am a dreadful fraud?" she said finally. Then, with a level glance, "How about yourself?"

"Me?" he asked blankly.

"Yes," said Coralie. "You." She drew from her pocket a torn bit of the photograph section of a metropolitan newspaper. "How are you enjoying Europe?"

Hartley viewed the picture—that of a young man, grip laden, his back to the photographer, about to board an outgoing ocean liner. "Hartley Van Buren, the banker's only son, about to sail."

"Discovered," said Hartley meekly. Then he threw back his head and laughed long and merrily. "It all hinges on that little word 'about.' I was booked to sail. Got my luggage aboard. But I stepped ashore and the boat left without me. Ran down here to go over on her next trip."

Coralie dimpled. "My mistake. Only—just see how easily you are deluded also. This Coralie Blake of the card was a little protegee of mine down in Neighborhood house whose name in her own tongue somewhat resembled mine, so, out of a strange fondness for me, she persisted in adopting it as hers, too! I don't often call myself Princess Olga, although, born in Russia with my mother an American and my father a Prince Boris, I am rightly entitled to do so."

Hartley seized the hand which was lying nearest him.

"Don't you think two such skeptical idiots ought to join forces?" he asked.

COLLEGE SMOKING

The general belief that all young people in college smoke has been rudely jolted by the report from one of the big state universities that scarcely 20 per cent of freshmen use tobacco.

Many of those freshmen learn later on, to be sure. By the time the senior class is reached, perhaps three-fourths of the members smoke. Another university says that about 90 per cent of the seniors use tobacco in some form, and 40 per cent of the first year men. Even so, there is a surprising proportion of students who, from principle or preference, are not addicted.

One college which permits smoking by either sex, announces as a result of a two years' survey that "smoking is harmful to a student."

Another college rather sensibly concludes that there is about the same proportion of smoking in colleges as there is elsewhere.

As for the harm, in college or out of college, perhaps there would be rather general agreement that tobacco harms the body and benefits the soul, thus making somewhere near an even break.

Says a philosophic smoker: "Heaven knows what would break loose in this present-day world if people didn't soothe their nerves with tobacco. It's hard enough to be calm and friendly and tolerant even under the influence of nicotine."

Fast washing made safe

The New

embodies a patented feature that makes fast washing safe.

The vertical crevice which is found at the base of the agitator in most washers of this type is apt to tear and wear clothing and crush buttons by grinding them between the two metal surfaces forming the crevice. This is not possible in the Haag Vortex. A patented design (it cannot be had in any other machine) eliminates entirely this destructive crack. For that reason the Haag Vortex can wash fast—60 pounds per hour—with perfect safety to clothing.

Every woman appreciates the new metal swinging wringer on the Vortex. You'll like it too. It has extra large semi-soft paralastic rolls. The bearings are made of wood which has been soaked in tallow. They require no oil—eliminating all chance of grease streaked clothing.

Call us on the phone and ask for a free demonstration in your own home. You will not be obligated.

Livable, Lovable Rooms

They owe much of their inviting charm to the deep comfort of
3-Piece Suites

From April till September one's passion for wicker and cretonne goes joyfully unchecked. But after that, say about the time the sun begins to slant pale gold and the wind takes on an edge—wicker and its playmates seem strangely cold and heartless (and spring-less)! While the mere mention of "overstuffed," "velour," "tapestry" calls up before eager eyes visions of untold warmth and friendliness. And warmth and friendliness are two things a winter living room needs to make it a success—to make it livable and lovable.

That Apricot Casement

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

CONWAY tried desperately to assume a nonchalant air as he stepped for the first time in his life into one of those great shops that invariably make a full-blown man quake.

"I'd gladly empty my pockets into any of those fair hands if only I didn't have to go in and shop," muttered Conway, "but I won't turn tail when it's for the dearest woman on earth I'm doing it." So Conway went bravely onward and, after inquiring where he could find curtain material, followed directions.

When he found that great floor entirely devoted to the most startling assortment of household fabrics he was more at sea than ever.

However, a fleeting expression caught his sensitive ears.

"I think there's nothing so heavenly as apricot casement against the windows with a soft Chinese blue velvet draped beside it."

Conway could hear no more, but that "apricot casement" and "Chinese blue" made a deep impression on his mind.

Edging into a small crevice along the counter he asked for apricot casement.

"The windows are twice the length of my walking stick and there are twenty-seven of them in the house," he told the girl who smiled amusedly at his evident nervousness, "and I want the same amount of Chinese blue velvet."

"Shall we send out a man to measure and put up the curtains for you?" inquired the girl.

Conway nodded vehemently. He hadn't supposed anything could be so easy. After that he selected Chinese blue rugs, flame-colored cushions and many other lovely things for the dearest mother in the world and went back to business a very much happier man. He hoped, when his mother came back from her trip of recuperation and saw the lovely wee house he had bought and was furnishing for her as a surprise, that she would like his taste.

The first time he went out to see the little semi-detached house he was delighted at the effect of the apricot casement in the windows.

Conway couldn't help glancing at the other half of his semi-detached house which was, of course, the counterpart of his own and saw in the bay window a most lovely face.

The eyes were, however, anything but friendly. In fact they were decidedly hostile.

"Nice way to start out with neighbors," thought Conway, and in a second realized that his windows were dressed exactly the same as hers, even to the Chinese velvet.

"Must be a bit miffed because I have the same amount of apricots," he reckoned, but felt a trifle sorry that one so fair should be incensed at him. However, he knew that his mother would straighten out any rough edges when she arrived, so Conway went about putting in a blue and purple garden in the front which in time would be most beautiful with lupin, violas and delphinium. He did not forget, however, that some one whose looks he rather liked was perhaps in the window next door watching him.

And watching him she certainly was. Leah had been preparing to be very peevish at her new neighbors simply because they had chosen the exact casement cloth she had for their windows, but now she felt different. Certainly she had no sole ownership of that color.

"I like him. I'll bet he goes walking with his pipe and a dog—a real dog—not a bunch of duff. Wonder if his wife is as nice as he is. Not likely. They never are." Leah sighed for no reason in particular and decided that when his wife came down, as she probably would when their furniture was put in, she would offer them a cup of coffee.

Conway was pleased with his day's work and went away with the feeling that his mother would be quite overjoyed when she arrived.

No, was he mistaken. When his little mother stepped out of the village taxi and her big son put his arm around her and pulled her joyfully up the flagged path she looked up at him with such a love in her eyes that it quite made Leah watching through the apricot casement, jealous. There was no slightest doubt that Conway's mother adored the son who had given her so great a surprise. Leah realized that she could follow suit if she were given a chance.

When Conway and his mother had had time to see everything in the new house, Leah went out of her front door with a most dainty tray and carried it to the next door. Conway opened it and a most charming smile leapt into his eyes.

"You couldn't have done a sweeter thing, Miss Neighbor. My mother was just wishing she had a cup of coffee and some thin bread and butter—moving day is always tiring. Come in, please, and meet her, won't you?" Conway had taken the tray and led Leah to his mother. "Mother, a good angel has appeared."

Afterward Conway laughingly told how he had selected his window dressings, and Leah realized that it was she he had overheard that day recommending apricot and Chinese blue.

"And we'll always have apricot casement and Chinese blue velvet wherever we live, shan't we, Leah dear?" said Conway the day Leah promised to marry him.

DEVIL IS NOT IN HELL, BIBLE STUDENTS TOLD

Neither Is Hell a Place of Fire and Brimstone, Speaker Tells Audience.

"The devil is not in hell, and never has been there," A. P. Johnson yesterday told International Bible Students at K. of P. Hall.

"Hell is not a place of fire and brimstone as was once supposed. The Hebrew word translated hell in our English Bibles, also is frequently translated 'grave' and 'pit,'" he said.

"Jacob understood hell to be a place of unconsciousness and death, just as described by Ecclesiastes.

"Not only has the devil never been in hell, but he will go into the lake of fire and brimstone. He will be completely destroyed.

"Hell is the condition of death from which there will be an awakening. The lake of fire, or Gehenna, represents destruction, or the second death. After the final judgment has been rendered and all the wilfully wicked have been destroyed, the universe will be in perfect harmony, and only that which is good will remain.

"Only those who love the right will have everlasting life in any sense of the word. Life in its fulness, upon a restored earth, which shall be made like the garden of Eden, will be the portion of all who will accept it upon the reasonable terms of obedience to the truth and to the right," he said.—O. S. Journal.

Shoes Like Stilts

Toward the end of the Seventeenth century it became the custom in Venice for women to wear "chopines," or exceedingly high-heeled shoes, almost like stilts. Social prestige was indicated by the height of the footwear.

FRENCH PORTERS ROB TOURISTS

Charges for Service Said to Be Excessive.

Paris.—One hundred francs for carrying two suitcases from the customs shed at Cherbourg to the tender, a trip of less than 100 yards, is charged by porters.

The imposition has caused the foreign steamship companies to take drastic steps against it. The union of baggage porters appears to have singled out Americans for its holdup tactics. In some instances passengers, especially unescorted women, have been literally robbed.

One American woman recently embarking on one of the ships flying the American flag gave the porter 40 francs. He demanded that she open her bag and produce more money. Terrorized, the woman unclasped her handbag and showed the porter one 20-franc note, all the French money she had left.

"This will have to do," said the holdup man, snapping the bill away. The woman shrieked, and one of the officials came along and made the porter disgorge but not without a short, spirited fight.

These instances, which had multiplied by hundreds recently, caused the skipper of an American ship to send for the walking delegate of the porters' union and warn him that if such sharp practice did not cease he would call upon his crew to handle the baggage and give them instructions to give a forced bath to any porter interfering.

Wood of Palmetto Tree Now Used for Furniture

Atlanta, Ga.—The sabie palmetto tree, emblematic of the state of South Carolina, is about to attain its second place in the history of the United States. This time it will be chronicled in the annals of furniture manufacturing.

The tree received first historical mention as a protection for the American colonists in their defense of Fort Moultrie, where the shot from the British fleet sank harmlessly in the soft, spongy logs.

His attention prompted by the unique porous quality of the tree, a large industrialist acquired a 300,000-acre tract of groves and enlisted the aid of 12 laboratories of furniture companies in an attempt to apply a veneer finish.

The work was assigned to the wood-work department of the Georgia School of Technology, which, after a two-year period of research, has just succeeded in applying a glasslike veneered surface.

Its only use in the past has been for dock piling and the building of rugged, picturesque log cabins.

Eggless Custard Sale Cost Him $10 Fine

Brockton, Mass.—Judge Carroll C. King had a busy day in district court here with cases that resulted from the Brockton fair. One case established itself as well out of the ordinary. It concerned one Lester Kohn, a concessionaire at the grounds. He was charged with "sale of custard containing no eggs." State Health Inspector Daniel G. McCarthy brought the charge, claiming that Kohn was doing a rushing business in selling custards, but he informed Judge King that a custard is not a custard without eggs. Kohn paid a $10 fine and it is the first time in the history of the local court that a conviction has been made on such a charge.

Presidents, Popes Have Longest Lives

Washington.—What class of persons live the longest as an average?

Occupants of the White House hold the record for longevity, according to statistics on notable men compiled by Pitrim Sorokin, a Russian economist. Their average life span is almost exactly the biblical three-score and ten.

Close on their heels as long-lived mortals are the popes of the Roman Catholic church, who average 69.6 years. A third group includes American millionaires, with 63.2 years. Scholars and scientists average 67.3 years and writing men 64.4 years.

The poorest showing was made by the hereditary monarchs of Europe. Though this group included some very long-lived families, the average longevity was only 53.6 years. In explanation of the poor showing of kings, it has been pointed out that other groups represent the results of selection.

The presidency and the papacy, for example, are both elective offices and are filled invariably by men of mature years and usually good health, who have made their own records, while monarchs are notabilities simply by accident of birth, and by the same accident of birth may come of stocks decidedly inferior so far as health and vigor are concerned.

You Cannot Always Tell

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

THE sun-brown young man in riding trousers at the far end of the veranda looked speculatively after the smartly dressed young woman who had just flitted down the hotel steps. There was something about her which seemed to say "I am" and "I belong." Hartley had no doubt about that. He had long wanted to meet her, but, strangely enough, she seemed to know no one among the guests at the hotel and kept decidedly by herself.

Leisurely, he rose and sauntered slowly off in the direction that the young lady, listed simply as C. Blake in the register, had taken.

Now it happened that a dilapidated old flyver was parked at the summit of a short but very steep grade ascending from the main thoroughfare of the village. Standing at the curb and insufficiently blocked, it suddenly wheeled into motion and began a rapid descent, driverless, down to the crossing below.

With a fearful speed it came down, heading straight for a group of pedestrians just as Hartley glimpsed in that group, the silk-sweatered form of the girl he was trailing. He saw the menacing flyver before she did and, without an instant's hesitation, catapulted against her in such a way as to push her ahead out of the way, plunging forward himself but escaping only by a narrow margin the terrific impact of the machine.

The incident needs no further dwelling upon. It had served its purpose. Having one's life saved is sufficient introduction for most of us and a few brief words—"Why, yes, we are at the same hotel, are we not?" and "I am sure I remember you" established them further on cordial ground.

Not until Hartley reached his room did he realize that names had not passed between them, although, for that matter, she might as easily discover his name as he had discovered hers.

However, the following morning as they met on the veranda, Hartley hastened to repair the omission. "I forgot to mention yesterday," he said rather hesitantly, "I am Hartley Van Buren."

The girl looked up at him quickly. "I—I am the Princess Olga of Russia," she said.

But Hartley didn't like the laugh. It was quite evident that she didn't believe him.

In the days that followed, their acquaintance ripened into friendship which seemed in turn about to ripen into something even deeper and more lasting. There was always a slight pause when each addressed the other by name, but the subject had not been mentioned again between them. In fact, personalities had been rather avoided between them beyond those which dealt with the various tastes and interests they found that they shared.

Then, one afternoon, after a long delightful hour on the beach, "Princess Olga" had occasion to open her little beaded purse and, as she did so, out dropped a card.

Hartley bent to pick it up and, as he did so, could not avoid seeing the printed inscription.

Coralie Blake, manicurist.
Now Hartley did not see anything remotely disgraceful in being a manicurist. To him it seemed as honorable a way of earning a living as any other. What really troubled him was the girl's deceit.

Not that she had ever said right out and out that she was not a manicurist! No, indeed. But she had led him to believe that she had spent her life in a far different sort of way—travel, study, charities such as only the rich indulge in.

Hartley braced himself.

"Princess," he said, "I couldn't help seeing what was on that card."

Coralie looked up at him, puzzled. Then, "Oh, yes," she said.

He waited for her to go on while he watched her miserably and realized that he adored every crinkly curl on her aristocratic little head.

"You—you think I am a dreadful fraud?" she said finally. Then, with a level glance, "How about yourself?" "Me?" he asked blankly.

"Yes," said Coralie. "You." She drew from her pocket a torn bit of the photogravure section of a metropolitan newspaper. "How are you enjoying Europe?"

Hartley viewed the picture—that of a young man, grip laden, his back to the photographer, about to board an outgoing ocean liner. "Hartley Van Buren, the banker's only son, about to sail."

"Discovered," said Hartley meekly. Then he threw back his head and laughed long and merrily. "It all hinges on that little word 'about.' I was booked to sail. Got my luggage aboard. But I stepped ashore and the boat left without me. Ran down here to go over on her next trip."

Coralie dimpled. "My mistake. Only—just see how easily you were deluded also. This Coralie Blake of mine was a little protégée of mine down in Neighborhood house whose name in her own tongue somewhat resembled mine, so, out of a strange fondness for me, she persisted in adopting it as hers, too! I don't often call myself Princess Olga, although, born in Russia with my mother an American and my father a Prince Boris, I am rightly entitled to do so."

Hartley seized the hand which was lying nearest him.
"Don't you think two such skeptical idiots ought to join forces?" he asked.
